Meet the facilitators

Amy Pearson

I am Head of Science at Nobel School. I have a lead role in KS4 science and have high expectations of my staff when implementing the new GCSE.

My interests are in professional development and teaching and learning. I am the Professional Mentor for the NQTs at our school and I also work with staff members across the school from all different levels of experience to help develop their teaching and learning strategies.

I feel that all members of staff should have opportunities to develop their teaching and valuing all members of staff allows them to reach their full potential.

Simon Hanse

I have been a qualified teacher for twenty years. During this time, I have led history departments in two very different contexts. Having been Head of History and Politics at Hitchin Girls' School for over ten years now I have built up a wide range of experience and had the opportunity to develop my career in the context of an Ofsted 'outstanding' school. My experience has provided me with considerable insight in terms of teaching history and politics to a diverse range of students and managing the requirements for leading on a range of qualifications.

Having recently completed a Masters qualification in Education I feel that I have had the opportunity to develop skills of close reflection and analysis of pedagogical thinking which I am able to use to identify existing good practice while also setting agreed targets for improvement.
